

For Damian Walker the aim of cycle training was to enable his three sons to cycle to school. The four-seater bicycle was bought for the school run but the children each had an individual cycle lesson. In the training they learnt road craft, tactics for safer cycling and communicating with other road users. Damian described the training as a 'must' and 'reassuring' for parents.

'There is a real buzz in cycling with your children. You get to experience speed and diversity as well as travelling on routes where cars simply can't go.'

The children thought that the best bits of the training were learning about junctions, being pro-active and making your presence felt. Cycling also allows them to get to school on time regardless of the traffic conditions!

“There is a real buzz in cycling with your children. You get to experience speed and diversity as well as travelling on routes where cars simply can't go.”

